THE CATTLE DISEASE IN NEW HAMPSHIRE.—On Tuesday, last week, the selectmen of Hillsborough received information from Medicid, Mass., that two heifers, which had been exposed to the contagion of the disease which is decimating the herds of neat steek in several towns in Massachusetts, had been sent to Hillsborough for pasturage. Two days afterward these animals were slaughtered and municipally and the second contagination. New Designs and Colors — Bost an Choicest Fabrics. Two days afterward these animals were slanghtered, and unmistakable evidences of the disorder found. The herd with which they were driven into this State, some two hundred in number, is now said to be in pasture in the towns of Warner, Bradford, Washington, Hancock, Lempster, Stodard, and Marlow. In evidence of the deadly subtlety of the contagion, it was found that a calf helonging to the herd of Nathaniel Janes, of Hillsborough, which had escaped from its pasture and mingled for a brief time with the herd in which were the beifers from Medhield, had become infected, and after its slaughter it was found as much diseased as the animals previously killed. Among the cattle of Reed P. Whittemore, several are supposed to be infected, one which was killed proved to be so. Now, with all our profound respect for nursery traditions and wise old saws of the moral, physical, and percumiary advantages of getting up early; that the early bird catches the worm, and that early fishing makes a man healthy wealthy and wise, we are inclined to think with the Bulletin that there is obvious common sense in the Windship theory, as every man knows that nothing rejuvecates like sound sleep, and that after sleeping unany bours from want of thorough rest.
